

It came to my attention that the FCC is thinking of lowering standards and allowing the F-word and female frontal nudity on regular television at any time of day. I am morally opposed to this change.

My 5-year-old dropped the F-bomb just two days ago and shocked us all. I do not use that word, my husband does not use that word, his friends do not use the word. And we strictly regulate his television viewing. This means that he has had VERY limited exposure to that word, I would venture to bet he has only heard it once! And, yet, that one time made an impression. Imagine if he started hearing it every day on regular television. Ultimately, this change would lead to my discontinuance of television viewing in my home and you will lose all of those advertizing dollars that come with it. Not a smart move.
